Maybe having these videos go viral might help show the world that asexuals aren't our enemy, that we are not throwing toxic kimchi (or kimchi) at all the world's kimchis. In fact, I would go as far as to say that asexuals are a superpower of humanity, when properly utilized and understood, and I'd love to see more people, especially those who are not asexual themselves, to become fans and supporters of asexuality. So, here's what I propose: Acceptance Videos Short story, short story. The asexuality acceptance movement needs to start in a new place. Video. It's fun, it's easier to understand what the thing is and people aren't afraid that they might end up watching porn. What about the focus? Let's go for a complete acceptance, in the widest possible meaning of that term. The most important part of getting to a complete acceptance of asexuality is that people don't need to make a big deal out of the fact that they are asexual. It's enough for them to show that they accept asexuality. This is why I like the video I have created at the start of this post. The person is not making a big deal about it. But she is showing that she's asexual. Just that. What about the people on the "come to aces" route? I don't mind people making videos showing what asexuality is, what asexuals are or how asexuals think and why. What I do

Her family and friends filled the room behind her, eager to see her make her very first run as the star of Auburn's women's basketball team. Simmons did not disappoint, not even in the opening minutes. As the Tigers took to the floor against the host and favorite to win the championship, Western Kentucky, Simmons delivered a pair of thunderous dunks that punctuated WKU's early benching. With about seven minutes gone in the first half, Simmons scored on a layup, followed by a 3-pointer from another Auburn player, Kira Lewis, to open a 7-2 Auburn lead. Simmons scored Auburn's next eight points, and the Tigers were in full control. Auburn trailed 20-2 at halftime. Simmons has had plenty of time to perfect her dunks, knowing they were the ones that would carry the largest load in her first game. "I have been practicing those for the last three months," Simmons said. "My biggest concern is that they look good, and my mom has been driving me to practice them." The dunks, of course, are reminiscent of Simmons' dunk over Stanford guard Brittany McPhee two years ago in the Sweet 16 of the NCAA Tournament. That was also a surprise for the then-sophomore. "I am pretty proud of both of them," Simmons said. "I really worked to perfect them this year. In preseason, I was just doing them, and I 82138339de
